GREAT SANDHILL CRANE MIGRATION IN KEARNEY, NEBRASKA: MARCH 2017 - escorted by Teri

Enjoy the fresh, crisp air of the mid-western plains and join us as we chase the Great Sandhill Crane Migration! This incredible experience is just a short flight away. An estimated 500,000 Sandhill Cranes (more than 80% of the World's population of Sandhill Cranes) stop over on the narrow stretch of the Platte River, near Kearney, Nebraska, as they have for thousands of years, creating one of the true wildlife spectacles of North America. The cranes congregate near the Audubon Society's Rowe Sanctuary to rest and eat corn before they finish their migration to their northern breeding grounds, as far away as Alaska and even Siberia. Teri led a group on this trip in 2016, and it was so magnificent that we are offering it again!

Wildlife conservationist and frequent annual visitor, Jane Goodall, described the migration as the 8th wonder of the world! Sandhill cranes are beautiful tall, lean birds, growing up to four feet tall. They have a massive wingspan of 5 to 6 feet. The entertainment is nonstop while viewing these birds – often, males perform dancing displays which involve wind flapping, bowing, jumps, throwing sticks or plants into the air, and simply playing around! On this trip, expect to see 40-50 different species of birds, many of them in HUGE flocks as they migrate. We will also have a great chance to see other wildlife such as coyote, red fox, mule deer and white tail deer.

If you like to photograph wildlife, enjoy bird watching, or just want a short get-away, join Teri on this interesting journey!
